The Politics of Virtue: Is Abortion Debatable? Elizabeth Mensch and Alan Freeman

“This book presents a strikingly original voice within legal scholarship and is sure to spark vigorous debate. Its originality lies in its ready concession to the pro-life side that abortion is a life-or-death issue, followed by its argument that this concession does not end the argument about what the proper role of abortion should be. It seeks to relocate the current abortion discussion onto a terrain that has potential for a less divisive resolution of the issue.”—Joan Williams, American University

“Mensch and Freeman have done pathbreaking work on the modern history of the abortion debate before Roe v. Wade was decided. Their work challenges the reader to see the common ground that has become forgotten in our recent abortion rhetoric.”—Ruth Colker, Tulane University Law School

AIDS in the World

Jonathan Mann, Daniel J. M. Tarantola, and
Thomas W. Netter, Editors

No single book tracks, on an annual basis, the evolution of the pandemic, its effects, and the worldwide response. To fill this gap, Jonathan Mann, founding director of the World Health Organization's Global Program on AIDS and currently director of the International AIDS Center at Harvard University, and a team of experts have produced an unprecedented document for our time. AIDS in the World synthesizes the best available information and thinking about AIDS into a volume that is destined to become a landmark publication.

It reviews the status of the disease, including numbers of AIDS cases and deaths worldwide; links between other infections and HIV; breakthroughs in biomedical, clinical, and behavioral areas; prevention and care; legislation and human rights issues; and economic and demographic issues.

A publication of the Global AIDS Policy Coalition

The Association of
AMERICAN UNIVERSITY PRESSES
Directory 1992-1993

The Association of American University Presses has for over fifty years worked to encourage the dissemination of scholarly research and ideas. Today the 109 members of the AAUP annually publish over 8,000 books and more than 500 periodicals. The directory offers a detailed introduction to the structure and publishing programs of AAUP member presses.

Among its useful features are:

- Information on 109 university presses in the U.S., Canada, and overseas
- Complete addresses, phone and fax numbers
- Names and responsibilities of key staff
- Subject area guide, with 136 categories, indicating which presses publish in a given area
- Advice for authors on the submission of manuscripts

A Measure of Malpractice

A Measure of Malpractice presents the results of the Harvard Medical Practice Study, the most comprehensive investigation ever undertaken of the performance of the medical malpractice system. The Harvard study was commissioned by the government of New York in 1986, in the midst of a malpractice crisis that had driven insurance premiums for surgeons and obstetricians in New York City to nearly $200,000 a year. The Harvard-based team of doctors, lawyers, economists, and statisticians set out to investigate what was actually happening to patients in hospitals and to doctors in courtrooms, launching a far more informed debate about the future of medical liability in the 1990s.

The authors, who came to the project from very different perspectives about the present malpractice system, are now in agreement about the value of a new model of medical liability. Rather than merely tinker with the current system—which fixes primary legal responsibility on individual doctors who can be proved medically negligent—legislatures should encourage health care organizations to take responsibility for the financial losses experienced by all patients injured in their care.
